

OUT-GOING, IN-COMING — William F. Smith, vice-president and manager Dansville office of Norstar Bank, retired last Friday after 20 years of service. With him is Helen J. Gray of Canaseraga, who succeeds him as manager. Smith joined the local office in 1967 when it was Security Trust. He was appointed manager in 1971 and assistant vice-president two years later. He was named a vice-president in 1978. A World War II Navy veteran, Smith is a graduate of Bankers School of Agriculture at Cornell University and Beneficial Management Institute. Mrs. Gray comes to Dansville from Norstar's Cohocton office where she served as manager since 1984. She is a member of the Canaseraga Board of Education and a graduate of Rochester Business Institute.

School Yearbooks Gain Spotlight

The senior yearbook plays an important role in activities of any graduating class. Dansville High is no exception.

And in an effort to recognize the part they play in the educational experiences of students throughout the country, Congress passed and President Reagan signed a resolution proclaiming Oct. 4-10 as National Yearbook Week.

According to Ralph Domesek, faculty advisor to the Danua staff at Dansville Senior High, the focus of National Yearbook Week is to educate the community, not only to the educational value of producing a yearbook, but also to such publication's continued historical and cultural value.

Orders for the 1988 Danua will begin during National Yearbook Week. Sales will begin in both the Senior High and Junior High and continue throughout October with a mailing to parents for those students who did not order one during the sale. The yearbook will be delivered and distributed to students in late May next year.

New Owner Takes Gunlocke Control

The cash sale of The Gunlocke Co. of Wayland to Chicago Pacific Corp. has been completed, according to an announcement last week by the local firm. The terms were not disclosed.

Chicago Pacific is an international home products company. Last year it acquired Pennsylvania House, Kittinger and McGuire furniture companies, which had total sales of $111 million in 1986, as well as Hoover and Rowenta companies, manufacturers of vacuum cleaners and other home products. The corporation's total sales for the year exceeded $900 million.

Gunlocke, in business for over 85 years, is best known as a premier manufacturer and marketer of office furniture. Its extensive line includes seating, casegoods and upholstered furniture, marketed primarily to businesses, government offices and educational institutions.

The firm is known for its wide use of steambending, a process that brings out the natural beauty of wood, and adds strength and durability to the products.

Gunlocke, with its headquarters and manufacturing facilities in Wayland, has a plant in Avon, and showrooms in New York, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Houston, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Washington, D. C. Its sales for the current year are expected to reach $60 million.

Harvey Kapnick, chairman and president of Chicago Pacific, said, "Gunlocke, with its outstanding reputation in the office market, will form another strong core from which we can continue our growth in the furniture industry and expand our overall objectives."

Sale of the local firm is not expected to have any immediate impact on its operation.

Phil Jones, Gunlocke vice-president for administration said, "We expect that for almost all employees of the company, the transition will be transparent."

He said, "In terms of employment, I think it will have a minimal impact on our current work force." Gunlocke employs 1,015 people in the local plant and at Avon.

Jones called Gunlocke a "perfect fit" for Chicago Pacific plans to create a "market-dominant furniture group...I'm sure we'll be looking to expand because the Chicago Pacific Corp. is committed to growth — profitable growth."
